INTRODUCTION

THE expediency of publishing a bibliography of the work of a living writer who shows no abatement in his admirable practice of the story-teller's art may seem open to question.

For a longer period than is accorded most authors for literary activity, Mr. James's work has been accumulating in amazing quantity in widely scattered mediums, and increasingly, without adequate guidance, librarians are being asked to "hunt it up." The following bibliography should facilitate this research and enable Mr. James's readers to find a particular title, either in periodical form, in the original collection, in a later rearrangement, or in one of the numerous reissues of groups of stories or essays.

It is not generally known that a very large proportion of Mr. James's work is uncollected, and that many of his most interesting and characteristic papers are now almost lost in the files of old or extinct periodicals.

Besides the record of all the signed work of the author, some anonymous writing that can be credited to him has been noted, and that portion of the bibliography which catalogues his contributions to periodicals may reveal work of much variety and of uncommon value previously unknown to the most constant readers of Henry James.

Original editions of Mr. James's works, with the first issues of other esteemed authors of America and England, are eagerly sought for by collectors. I have considered the constantly arising queries of the bibliophile in the preparation of this book. In each instance the collations have been made directly from first edition copies.

While work by Mr. James is universally labelled, classified, and catalogued as "American Fiction," "American Biography," and the like, yet by reason of his long residence in England and close association with London publishers, implying that the English editions of his later books were issued more directly under the author's personal supervision than those offered in this country, the usual preference for first American editions of American authors and first English editions of English authors is in his case uncertain. When a book is issued simultaneously in both countries there are, even in America, some buyers of Mr. James who give precedence to the volume with the English imprint as the one to be included in their collections of first editions. This is a matter of individual choice which is not for the bibliographer to determine. When the date of imprint is the same, or a title appeared at approximately the same time in both countries, I have included descriptions of the first American and first English editions.

In compiling the bibliography I have used the word edition to mean an impression from type, or from plates from type, set up afresh, either with or without alteration. Subsequent impressions from standing type and reprints from plates are not considered.

Whenever a volume contains any matter that is first issued in book form, the collation is given. Except to show the difference between the first American and first English editions, no title is fully described more than once, as subsequent editions, indicated by the words "The Same," are noted under the original entry.

Groups of stories or essays, all of which have appeared previously in book form but which vary in arrangement from the original volume in which they were collected, are not described, as in the case of first editions, but are noted.

The sizes of the sheets used for printing modern books are so varied that the old names, 12mo, crown 8vo, and the like, convey very little meaning. The terms here used are those employed by the publishers in their earliest announcements of the books.

The arrangement of the bibliography is so evident that no detailed explanation of it is needed.

Part I includes the author's Original Works,—the books issued with titles which Mr. James has chosen, and the contents of which are entirely his work.

Part II shows Mr. James's Contributions to Books projected or compiled by others, the general titles of which are not of his selection. A translation of Daudet's "Port Tarascon" is also included in Part II.

Part III is a list of the author's Contributions to Periodicals. Many of these were printed anonymously and are uncollected. Unsigned contributions have been credited to Mr. James only when they can be authenticated.

A brief Appendix gives an opportunity, not offered in the body of the bibliography, to notice the two instances in which unpublished plays by Mr. James have been presented on the professional stage.

The blank pages at the end of the bibliography are included for the purpose of entering notes in reference to the author's future work, rumors of which, including radical revisions of some of the early stories recorded in the first pages of this book, and a collected edition, are already in the air. It is unlikely that the space will prove adequate, and the little world of readers to which Mr. James addresses himself awaits his future performance with keen expectancy.

LE ROY PHILLIPS.

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

MR. JAMES is the author of two unpublished plays which were presented on the professional stage in London,—a dramatization of his novel “The American,” October, 1891, and “Guy Domville,” January, 1895.

As neither play has been available for readers, a record of them could not appropriately be included in the body of this bibliography.

The English dramatic critics gave both plays unusual consideration, and citations from them can be found at the time of their production in the numerous journals devoted to the drama.

In America a criticism of the production of “The American” appeared in The Atlantic Monthly, December, 1891; and of “Guy Domville” in Harper's Weekly, March 2, 1895.
